Provincial Jurisdiction

March 29, 1867

The British North America Act created Canada and gave the provinces the primary jurisdiction over labour laws. This is still the case. As such, almost 85% of Canadian workers are covered by provincial labour laws. Federal labour law covers workers in the federal public service, federal crown corporations, postal services, customs, as well as nation wide sectors like banking and all telecommunications.

Labour rights are human rights!
